Dear Committee Members,

When I signed up to be a PC-20 program Provider, I did so because I wanted to help people with mental illness live as independently as possible. The services I provide to them each month do just that. And I don't believe that a requirement of this job should be having to agree that my personal cell, address, or email be public information. That's my private information. Are private sector workers that provide in-home supports to people with mental health needs similarly asked to risk their privacy and safety to do their jobs?

The work we do on behalf of the most vulnerable Oregonians is oftentimes emotionally draining as well as physically taxing. It is essential that we be safe and have the right to have a choice in what of our personal information is shared, when and with whom, not just automatically shared because we signed up to serve the public.

Thank you for your time and consideration,

Diana Lobo
